Abigail Smith

Bio

Abigail is a second-year full-time international doctoral student and Holmes scholar from Jamaica in the International Education Policy Program at the University of Maryland, College Park. Her assistantship in the Global Learning Initiative Office supports institutional internationalization efforts. Her career in education spans the United States, the United Arab Emirates, and Semester at Sea (with the Institute of Shipboard Education). She has leadership experience with organizations such as IASAS (International Association for Student Affairs and Services), NASPA (National Association of Student Personnel Administrators) and ACUHOi (Association of College and University Housing Officers-International). She also supports non-profit organizations in the Caribbean that focus on girls' education and empowerment. Abigail's research interests focus on the internationalization of higher education, education development through epistemic justice in the Caribbean, and the experience of Black teachers, students, and faculty in U.S education systems. In her spare time, she enjoys reading, traveling, playing tennis, and baking sourdough bread. Abigail holds a B.A. in Sociology from Randolph College in Virginia and an M.A. in Higher Education and Student Affairs from the University of Connecticut.
